Please keep Reid in your prayers. Reid wanted to go to the hospital over a week ago to fight as he was in very bad shape from infection. His whole life he has dealt with more than anyone should have to go through and he is dealing with so much right now. Please pray for peace and healing.

Have you ever heard someone say, "It's in my genes" or "It's in my DNA"?
Well, that's because our DNA (which makes up our genes) makes us uniquely who we are. Sometimes, in the millions of combinations and careful order of our DNA, a mistake happens. Most of the time, we don't even know it's happened, but sometimes a small change in DNA can result in a huge impact, like in RDEB.
In RDEB, the change can be very small (just an example, DNA doesn't really look like this):
Correct → COLLAGEN
With typos → COLLEGAN
Model of DNA from Naturel History Museum in Leiden, the Netherlands
Without the right DNA template, cells that should produce the protein (COLLAGEN) that helps hold the layers of the skin together, don't produce any. This is why people with RDEB get blisters and wounds from even a little friction—the skin layers can slide or pull apart.
Scientists now know how to "edit" the DNA in genes so that the "typo" is fixed and the cell can work correctly again. One of the technologies they use to fix it is called "clustered regularly-interspaced palindromic repeats," but don't worry, you can call it "CRISPR." Once the DNA is in the right order, the cell can produce that much-needed protein.
COLLEGAN
COLLAGEN
That's an important advance in science, but wait, there's more!
Put together by scientists at the University of Minnesota, these two technologies set the stage for new therapies for inherited diseases like RDEB.
Scientists have learned how to take an "adult" cell, like a patient's skin cell (that can only make more skin cells) and make it act like it's a different kind of cell, an iPS cell
And an iPS cell can not only make skin cells
it can also make blood-producing cells and other body cells.
For example, if the corrected cells are made back into skin cells, they could be used as to create a new skin graft for the patient. If the corrected cells are coached to become blood-producing cells, they could be used for a bone marrow transplant for a patient. In these cases, the patient is getting cells just like his/her own (only fixed), so there are no complications with graft or transplant preparation or rejection.
Researchers in Minnesota are now able to do this successfully in human cells, but it isn't ready for patients quite yet. The next steps are to continue to test the method to make sure it is very, very safe, and to work on "scaling up" the process so that enough cells can be made to help a person.
To make a gift to these scientists to help make this research a reality:

We wanted everyone that keeps up with Reid to know that everything is going good. After a BMT, numbers fluctuate and it is expected. Reid had a tick down in his CD3 measure which helps support the engraftment of the new cells. We were bringing Avery and Barrett up this week anyway and Dr Tolar wanted to take advantage. Tolar can exctract Tcells from Avery and be able to give those to Reid as a booster. He is essentially taking ad… See more

November 17th marks the beginning of Reid's journey with Dr Tolar as we will begin the process for the Bone Marrow Transplant at the University of Minnesota. We really don't know what to feel...anxious, eager, scared, but we do know this is the right thing to do. The BMT is going to give Reid a better quality of life and get him to the next step which is a cure.
Please keep Reid and our family in your prayers. Dr Tolar is an amz… See more

The reason we posted this picture of Reid was to show what is behind his bandages and the pain

he deals with daily. When we post the pictures and videos of him laughing and smiling it is because even though he is in so much pain he still finds a reason to smile and laugh which is amazing. God defiantly watches over him and will continue to guide our family through making his quality of life better. I must also address someone's pos… See more

Back home in Georgia. We left Minneapolis where it was 47 degrees and landed in Atlanta where it was 87 and it felt like 100% humidity. Minnesota definitely beats Georgia this time of year. It was a long hard trip, but look forward to going back soon to get Reid better. We are happy to have been able to meet Christie Zink and Gabriella McCann and all the people at U of M. They have an absolutely amazing hospital.
